MODEST fall in the jobless rate shows Australia's labour market is still resilient, giving the Reserve Bank breathing room before it cuts interest rates again.

The unemployment rate edged down to 4.2 per cent in July, the Australian Bureau of Statistics reported last week, while 25,000 jobs were added to the economy.

Both figures were in line with market expectations.

While it was the first fall in the unemployment rate - by one decimal point since November, the result does not mean the softening in the labour market from recent months has reversed.

It partly reflected an unwinding of a surprise jump in unemployment in June, which economists noted at the time was partly due to a sub-sample with a higher-thanaverage unemployment rate being rotated into the survey.

As JP Morgan analyst Tom Kennedy noted, the Reserve Bank is expecting the unemployment rate to reach 4.3 per cent by the end of 2025 and hold until the end of 2027 at least

"Accordingly we don't think the outcome is significant for short-run policy expectations, but may become more influential later in (the second half of 2025) given the standing forecasts don't provide much buffer against a more pronounced labour deterioration," he said.

Before the labour market print, money markets were fully pricing in another interest rate cut by November and their odds were little changed after the data release.

The growth in employment was driven by more women entering the workforce

Female full-time employment grew by 40,000, double the amount of new male fulltime workers, with the female participation rate reaching a record high.

The overall participation rate remained at a relatively high 67 per cent as the number of unemployed people decreased by 10,000.

Full-time jobs increased by 60,000, while part-time employment fell by 36,000.

The underlying trend in employment growth has been faster than the rise in population for most of the past year, but in recent months the two were growing at about the same rate, ABS head of labour statistics Sean Crick said.

Overseas arrival data also released by the ABS last week showed net migration was trending up again despite tougher visa requirements and student caps, placing more upward pressure on home prices, AMP economist Diana Mousina said.

The labour market remained resilient, defying a broader slowdown in the economy, Oxford Economics Australia head of macroeconomic forecasting Sean Langcake said.

"But the labour market now appears to be in the early stages of a downturn," he said.

"With no evidence of an impending implosion in the labour market, the Reserve Bank could afford to wait until the next quarterly inflation data in late October, NAB head of markets economics Tapas Strickland

"NAB continues to see the RBA cutting rates again in November and February, bringing the cash rate down to 3.1 per cent which we see as broadly neutral," he said.

RBA governor Michele Bullock noted various indicators suggest conditions in the labour market had eased in recent months.

"There's some sense in which the labour market is easing," she told reporters after the central bank cut interest rates by 25 basis points recently.

There are some indicators that we think suggest that things are still a little bit on the tight side.

"If we can maintain where we are I don't think that's a bad thing."

Treasurer Jim Chalmers said welcomed the fall in unemployment, coming soon after the interest rate cut and the best growth in real wages in five years. - Jacob Shteyman, AAP

Classic COUNTRY HOUSES HOLDING BACK THE REGIONAL

HE typical country house has a big backyard, lots of room for a family, a manicured green lawn, a garden shed and likely a blooming rose bush or two.

But this idyllic image of rural living is part of a complex set of problems holding regional Australia back, as a worsening housing shortage sets in, according to new research.

Low density, detached dwellings dominated regional housing approvals by the end of 2024, at a time when the population was booming and rental vacancy rates were at just 1.7 per cent.

This limited housing diversity in country towns was making it difficult to house critical workers, such as doctors, teachers and the labourers who would drive renewable energy projects, a landmark report from the Regional Australia Institute said.

"The lack of dedicated national and statelevel attention to regional housing has led to persistent barriers in planning, financing, construction and infrastructure delivery," said the Answering the Call for Regional Housing report, released on Thursday.

"Consequently, many regional communities lack the housing diversity and supply needed to support essential workers, accommodate population growth, enable our senior residents to remain in their communities and support our most vulnerable."

Total housing approvals in the regions fell to 48,570 per annum in 2024, while the population grew by more than 117,000 in 2023.

The low supply and high demand led regional house prices to rise by 62 per cent in the five years to mid-2024, compared to 37 per cent in the capitals.

The housing affordability advantage in the country was waning, the report said.

The worsening squeeze has led the regional think tank to call for 480,000 of the National Housing Accord's 1.2 million homes to be built outside the cities.

Under the accord, federal, state and territory governments have agreed to the building target over five years.

"The focus of the national housing debate must shift towards increased housing construction in regional Australia," institute chief executive Liz Ritchie said. The research also recommended governments establish regional housing agencies, along with the appointment of a federal regional housing commissioner.

Targeted funding for key worker housing should also be increased, while regional construction businesses should be supported to deliver larger and multi-complex dwellings.

"Right now the national housing discourse is dominated by talk of capital city growth and fails to address the chronic housing shortfalls in regional Australia," Mr Ritchie said.

"However, without a significant step-up in housing supply in the regions, our communities will struggle to attract and retain workers, deliver services and grow economically."

PAUSE ON NEW REGULATIONS TO

fast track BUILDING HOMES

PAUSE in updating rules as part of national construction standards will give builders "room to breathe," the housing minister says.

A suite of measures brought out following the productivity roundtable to boost the number of homes being built will see upcoming changes to the national construction code paused until 2029.

Updates to the more than 2000 page code are normally undertaken every three years.

The rules were not usable for many builders in the industry, while construction times needed to be sped up, Housing Minister Claire O'Neil said.

"There really won't be meaningful changes to the code for a seven-year period, so this is where we're giving our builders a bit of room to breathe." she told Sky News on Sunday.

"The biggest issue we've got in the code at the moment is just sheer complexity.

"This is a code which has ballooned out to more than 2000 pages.

"It's really about streamlining, about simplifying and making sure that we provide builders the very best opportunity to build more homes more quickly."

The freeze excludes essential safety and quality changes and maintains residential standards adopted in 2022, including seven-star energy efficiency.

A simplification of the construction code was one of the areas of consensus that came out from attendees of the government's three-day economic summit.

Other housing reforms to come out of the summit include fast-tracking the environmental assessment of more than 26,000 homes.

A specialised environment department team will be set up to deal with the applications, with tools like AI also being used to speed up approvals.

Ms O'Neil said the changes would make inroads to national housing targets of 1.2 million new homes being built by the end of the decade.

"We desperately need more homes for Australians in our country, and this is the way to get it," she said.

"These are big, meaningful steps forward on housing that have come as a direct result of the roundtable conversation.

"But shadow treasurer Ted O'Brien said the pause in the national construction code was similar to policy the opposition took to voters at the federal election.

The coalition promised to freeze the code for a 10-year period as part of their housing policy.

"The only concrete step that comes out of the roundtable is coalition policy," Mr O'Brien told Sky News.

"It would have saved a lot of time, a lot of effort, if you know, they just put a post on social media saying, 'thanks, coalition, good idea." But the minister said the coalition's proposal would have seen a total pause and not have dealt with safety and consumer issues.

The Property Council of Australia's Mike Zorbas said the measures will help unlock tens of thousands of new homes.

"This is a win-win roadmap to better housing supply," he said.

Master Builders Australia chief executive Denita Wawn applauded the government, saying the constant churn of regulatory change had added pressure to a complex and costly system.

Australian Council of Social Service chief executive Cassandra Goldie, at the summit, warned a construction code freeze could mean households least able to afford home retrofits for a changing climate and energy future could lose out if reforms miss the mark.
